[CASE STUDY · CAMPAIGN DIRECTOR · 2025–26]

Texans for Lange

A second run for office, a statewide race and a name most voters still didn't know. How we put Michael in front of Texas.

[THE CHALLENGE]

A second run, and still a name few Texans knew.

[A] No name recognition

Michael's first run came during COVID, when candidates couldn't meet voters in person.

[B] Virtual events fell flat

Online town halls couldn't build the trust a room full of people does.

[C] No support

One month in, the campaign director fell ill. Michael was left running it alone.

[Julian Onderdonk, Approaching Rain, Southwest Texas, 1922] A lot of ground to cover, and weather coming in.

[THE APPROACH]

A campaign that works as hard as the campaigner.

I stepped in as campaign director and ran everything behind the scenes, so Michael could do what he does best: campaign. When the work behind him matched the work he put in, his effort went just as far.

[Julian Onderdonk, A White Road at Late Afternoon, 1921]

[HOW]

Most candidates work only the top 10 counties. We went where the impact was greatest.

We focused on underserved areas that rarely see a statewide campaign, where showing up counted most.

80+ — Appearances
In the counties other campaigns skip.

Local — Micro-local club sponsorships
We sponsored very local clubs in each community to show real support.

[WHAT I RAN]

Seven jobs. One director.

Brand design

A visual identity built to make Michael's name stick.

Messaging

One clear story Michael could tell in any county.

Website

Home base for voters, volunteers and donors.

Event strategy

Routing and booking in-person stops, week after week.

Content creation

Paid media

Targeted ads that took each stop far past the room.

Social

Always-on channels that kept the conversation going.

All of it ran behind the scenes, so Michael could stay in front of voters.

[RESULTS]

From unknown to a name Texas knew.
